LIVERPOOL, June 5.

Extract of a letter from an officer of the 28th regiment, who was passenger on board of his Majesty's ship Cato, to a Gentleman in Whitehaven, dated Antigua, April 13.

"AFTER the history of distresses which I wrote you from Halifax, I was in hopes to get home, instead of which I have now another to send you from Antigua. We sailed from Halifax the 26th of January, in company with the Pallas, and seven or eight transports; four days after, about noon (being then off the Banks of Newfoundland) the wind began to blow very fresh from the N. W. and before night encreased to a most tremendous gale; but as I cannot pretend to give you an idea of it by description, I will only mention a few facts, from which perhaps you may form one. About 8 o'clock, the ship was scudding under a reefed foresail, and going eleven knots, with a dreadful sea following her, when she suddenly broached too. Every means that could be thought of were then tried to get her before the wind, but without success: In this dreadful situation she lay in the trough of the sea for two hours. It was then determined (if practicable) to bring her to under some sail, that she might the better stem the sea; but before this could be effected, the foresail blew away, and the main topsail also, which had not been quite furled, and even the sails which were furled on the yards were torn off and blown to pieces, the ship roled in such a manner as to dip the lower yard-arms in the water, and several times took in the whole body of the sea at her upper deck ports. Soon after the fore and main topmasts went over the side, she was at length brought to under a main stayfail, but that also went away.

"This dreadful night was but the beginning of our misfortunes, for when morning came the gale was, if possible, more violent. We lost our foremast, mizen topmast and main yard, and the following night carried away the tiller; in consequence of which the rudder, which was very bad, was beat to pieces, and went entirely away. In short it continued, with hardly any intermission, for a week, during which, amongst other distresses, the pumps were continually going, several of the orlop deck beams were broke by the working of the ship and the weight of the cables, which lay on them. All the upper deck and quarter deck guns were thrown overboard to ease the ship, for she laboured exceedingly, and a sea broke in at the stern, which carried away the larboard quarter gallery, and laid the ward room two feet under water.

"Such a gale as this was severely felt in a ship badly fitted, and worse manned, having scarce 100 working men in her, and not half of these tolerable seamen. When it abated, it was thought necessary to bear away for Antigua, and for this purpose a machine was made for steering the ship, but it did not answer, and in a subsequent gale, as violent as the preceding (but not of so long duration) it was obliged to be cut away.

"A method was then proposed and put in execution, by fastening two gun carriages to the end of a cable, and veering it a-stern; to this hawsers were carried from outriggers on each quarter, and leading to the capstan, so that by heaving in the starboard or larboard one occasionally, they made a shift to steer in a lame manner. The management of this was committed to 40 Frenchmen, whom we brought from Jamaica; the plan indeed was theirs, and they were on all occasions the best seamen in the ship. A jury foremast was likewise got up, and the ship put to rights as much as her situation would admit. It was thought necessary to go two-thirds allowance of all provisions, and in this no body fared better than the men, for what stock we had was either spent or destroyed in the gale. The ship lays now in St. John's road, where we arrived the 9th of April, after being almost three months at sea, and ten weeks without masts and rudder; and is to be carried round to English Harbour, in order to her being refitted, to go home. This will be a work of not less than six months.—We had passengers with us Sir Andrew Snape Hammond, his lady, and two children, a Mrs. Douglas, their relation (married to Captain Douglas, Sir Andrew's nephew) whose sufferings in such a situation you may conceive."

IRELAND.

Dublin, May 22. We hear from good authority, from a gentleman at Philadelphia, and in the confidence of Congress, that the American ports are open for the reception of Irish manufactures.

Another public defalcation has come to light: The Clerk to the Collector of Excise has thought proper to abscond with 5,300l. His securities are sued for the sum.

The encouragement given to the murder of bastard children in Scotland is very extraordinary; the sentence being to send the convicts out of their own country.

May 27. The review yesterday in the Phœnix Park was the most splendid that ever graced a body of Irish volunteers. The troops mostly mustered about half past seven in the morning at their different parades; by nine the lines of infantry were fully compleated in Stephen's green; the cavalry were drawn up in Dawson-street and lead to the Park, and were followed by the brigades of infantry, with their trains of artillery. The line of March was through Dawson, Nassau and Gratton-streets, College-green, Dame-street, over Essex-bridge, and along the quays of the Park.

The manœuvres of the review were closed by a general feu de-joye, and the whole body marched off the ground, and arrived in town about about six o'clock.

There were reviewed in all, 11 troops of horse, 25 corps of foot, and 6 artillery companies, with 12 field pieces.

Lord Nothington is expected to arrive on Saturday next.

From the (English) CHESTER CHRONICLE, of May 2, 1783.

To the SOVEREIGNS of EUROPE.

ENOUGH of war and desolation—Princes, it is time to sheath the sword—long may it rust in its scabbard—it is time to cultivate the arts of peace—to compensate for the miseries of ambition, by enjoying with gratitude the blessings of Providence. The goodness of the Creator is so abundant, that prosperity may smile on each nation, if she seeks not the adversity of her neighbours.—Why should we jostle one another? There is room enough for us all—Princes, to you I address myself—ye may prove a blessing or a curse to myriads—remember, as your power is great, your punishment will be proportionate, if you abuse it. Think not you are safe in your palaces, because you are secure from the terrors of war; there is a more Mighty Sovereign than you, who will sooner or later call you to account for the use of the authority he has delegated to you. Let past animosities be forgot; and be it your joint endeavours, for the future, to contribute to the felicity of your subjects.

It is the misfortune of mankind, that every scheme to promote their good is rendered fruitless from the vices of the mighty, the adulation of the courtiers, and the prejudices of the vulgar. The Great Henry, and his minister Sully, formed a plan for a perpetual peace in Europe, which they considered in the light of an immense republic. The Monarch was unfortunately murdered, the scheme was ridiculed as Utopian, and men continue to butcher brethren.

But this is not my present subject: I mean to submit to your consideration the state of literature.

All our knowledge in the polite arts is borrowed from those renowned nations the Greeks and Romans: They have taught us to speak; they have instructed us to write; they have shewn us models of patriotism; they have humanised and polished us; every principle of virtue and manners may be learned from their elegant and attick performances.

If we have reaped so much benefit from those which have escaped the injuries of time, how unfortunate is it, that among other arts they were ignorant of the art of printing? The ravages of war, fanaticism, and ignorance, have contributed to the loss of the most admirable performances. Princes, how meritorious would it be to search into every corner of the globe for these celebrated works! What glory to recover the remainder of Livy or Sallust—Polybius or Plutarch—Menander or Terence! Nor is the matter desperate—The Pandects of Justinian, the works of Aristotle, and still later the Ode to Ceres, shew that industry may recover what has been considered as irretrievably lost.

I shall point out where probably some of these standards of perfection may be recovered.

Though the Turkish Empire, ever since its foundation, has been inimical to learning, yet, as it was founded on the ruins of the most celebrated countries where every art and science was cultivated, it is improbable that all the ancient manuscripts have perished in the places of their nativity. In Egypt, in Greece, in Asia, there must still remain some vestiges of their pristine fame. Is it improbable that the Sultan preserves as curiosities the elegant rolls found in ancient splendid libraries? Is not the interest of a Joseph, a Catharine, or a Lewis, sufficient to obtain permission for some learned men to enquire through his extensive dominions for manuscripts, to purchase a copy?

How little would be the expence, when contrasted with the charges of a campaign? And how great the acquisition, if successful! The completing of a Livy will procure more true glory, than the conquest of a Province.

It is improbable that a search in Rome, once the mistress of the globe, and the rest of Italy, will not tend to the recovery of valuable manuscripts? Let the search be carried through those subterranean cavities, once the habitation of the old Romans, on the ruins of which modern Rome is built.

Let every private possessor, and every librarian, publish a catalogue of the ancient books in their custody. The desire of Alexander to engross all the learning, as well as the power of the globe, was unworthy of him. True glory consists in the encouragement of the arts; not in the possession of knowledge alone, but in diffusing it as much as possible. Surely nothing can be more ridiculous than the preserving in obscurity the finest works of the greatest masters, without being of the smallest use to a single mortal man.

In a particular manner, proper persons should be appointed to inspect the manuscripts found at Herculaneum.—If such were found as fame reports—why are not the learned appointed to peruse the beginning of each manuscript, until they know who is the author, and the subject, and from thence be satisfied if it be worth a further examination?—Let the result of their enquiries be made public, and the Kings of Spain and Sicily will acquire immortal honor.

As the Saracens, after the evaporation of that fanaticism which prompted them to destroy all works of genius, encouraged the arts to which they had been enemies, and translated most of the celebrated classicks into the Arabick, would not a list of Arabick manuscripts in private and public repositories be printed, to satisfy the world whether instruction can be thus obtained? From this channel considerable advantages may be derived, when the originals are irrecoverably lost. The King of Spain has here given the example—let him complete the work by a search of manuscripts in Pompeia and Herculaneum.

Princes! Ye have in many respects the power of benefiting mankind.—May your inclination correspond with your abilities!

From the CONNECTICUT COURANT of August 5.

Messrs. PRINTERS,

AS the publication of Town-Meeting Resolves is again become fashionable, I send you the following set, duly passed in a very respectable meeting. They are not indeed drawn up in so dictatorial a manner as the address of the county of Fairfax, nor in that poetical style, which distinguishes the late publication from Torrington: For it is not every draughtsman that can make footsteps bleed, purses feed on revenues served up to them in open purses, or fabric turn into a phœnomenon, and explode in smoke and four. Yet as the following resolves contain similar sentiments, expressed in much clearer language and with a greater share of argument, they may serve in some measure as an explanation and confirmation of the others.

SOCRATES.

At a Meeting of the Inhabitants of Geeseburrow, in Connecticut, Legally convened on the 27th of July, 1783.

THE instructions of the county of Fairfax, and the resolves of the towns of Lebanon and Torrington, were read, considered and approved—and thereupon the meeting unanimously came into the following resolves:

1. That government is one of those evils brought upon man by the fall, and ought always to be opposed by a free people; that we are free, and are determined never to be governed.

2. That there is the utmost danger of ruin to these States from the present exorbitant power and wealth of Congress; because Congress have neither wealth, power, nor influence, and were lately unable either for love or money to support their authority against the insults of eighty mutineers.

3. That it is contrary to the articles of confederation for these States to comply with any recommendations of Congress, particularly for payment of the public debts; and that such recommendations are strong proofs of the lust of power.

4. That though we empowered Congress to make all contracts with the army and others for future services, yet we never empowered them to make any contracts whatsoever; but all such contracts, if we chuse to dislike them after the services are performed, are no more than recommendations, and consequently unconstitutional, unjust and tyrannical.

5. That we have the highest veneration for these brave heroes, who, with a spirit of enthusiasm peculiar to patriots, have braved every danger, sustained every hardship, and secured our freedom and independence; at the same time we do not believe any such heroes ever existed, or if they did, that they were all private soldiers, artificers and militia.

6. That the officers of the army were in low indigent circumstances, entirely out of business at the beginning of the war, and utterly incapable of engaging in any lucrative employment; that their commissions were given them out of mere pity and generosity, and that they have all made independent fortunes in the service.

7. That the public engagements for half-pay was not binding, because it was a part of the contract for future services, and because we entirely acquiesced in it, and never in any public way lisped a syllable against it, till the services were all performed; that it was a bad bargain, and the mode disagreeable, and consequently it is better to break the union, and ruin the American empire by a national bankruptcy, than to make the best of a bad bargain, by paying the commutation, because it will amount annually to a tax of one copper on the pound in this State, and no more.

8. That notwithstanding all that General Washington has said in his last address, the commuration is a pension, and by that name shall ever after be known and called; because, in the first place, we are men of more sense than General Washington; and secondly, because the name pension is an excellent magic word to conjure up the spirit of faction and disunion, and serve the purposes of men, who wish to become popular by promoting dissentions.

9. That the commutation is a debt of seven millions of money, because it amounts to nearly a sixth part of that sum; the impost proposed is unjust, improper and tyrannical, because it is a sure and easy method of paying the public debts, which we do not mean ever to pay at all; that the public credit of the States ought never to be established, because an annual tax of eight-pence on the pound is all that is required for its establishment----that we are already ruined by taxes, because in the course of two years last this State has actually paid, on the taxes payable in that period, the amount of one shilling in the pound annually and no more, the residue remaining wholly uncollected; and because those who have not paid their taxes, and never intend it, are the very men, who make the greatest clamour on the subject.

10. That since we find the utmost difficulty in prevailing on the Delegates from this State to attend on Congress, we have no doubt that Congress intend very soon to retire on pensions and half-pay.

11. That both Congress and the General Assembly have absolutely refused to render any account of the public debts and expenditures; because both Congress and the Assembly have lately published particular statings of every article of debt and expenditure.

12. That it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, that Belzebub is the Prime Minister of the States, and the only acting partner in Congress and the several Legislatures in America; and that no public body of men can possibly be honest, except Conventions, Town-Meetings and Committees of Inspection.

13. That although we are men of universal knowledge and perfect wisdom, and able with infallibility to decide on all intricate questions of policy and government, yet we are perfectly ignorant of every public character or transaction, and not half so well qualified to chuse a Governor or Representative for this State, as for the Moon; and therefore these our resolves shall be forthwith published for the universal instruction of the United States.

Whereupon the meeting was adjourned.

TEST. QUACK GANDER, Clerk.

From the CONNECTICUT GAZETTE, July 25.

To the PRINTER.

WE think it our duty to inform the public, that last week, on application being made to Sir Guy Carleton, he gave an order for apprehending a number of people that were counterfeiting and passing Morris's and Hillegas's notes, several of them being apprehended, viz. William May, formerly a Chaplain in the American army, belonging to Brimfield, Massachusetts; Sylvester Lyon, of Woodstock, Connecticut; Lemuel Nichols, of Waterbury, Connecticut; and upon search, the Printer, whose name was Poor, was taken with all his types, blanks signed, and papers, &c. On apprehending the Printer, they found one Ferward, at his office, employed in signing of them (he is a refugee from Windsor, in Connecticut) and two others, one a refugee from Waterbury, named Nichols, the other Dennis Flin, from Sturbridge, Massachusetts. The Printer had counterfeit money of every kind, nearly two hogsheads; the greatest part were fifteen dollar notes, poorly executed. General Carleton has promised to send them to General Washington.

RICHMOND, (Virginia) August 2.

If (says a correspondent) the other states were to adopt a similar mode with this state, to prevent the return of the refugees, there would be no necessity for the people stepping forth to remedy this glaring public evil; for we find the Governor's proclamation has been complied with, a number having already departed the state in consequence of it; and if any remain, they know they are subject to the proclamation, which will inevitably be rigorously executed, the citizens being determined to put it in force.

A correspondent observes, that General Washington's circular letter, intituled his legacy, must (if possible (convey a greater idea of that illustrious character, than his unparalleled prudence and wise conduct during the war.

"Envy itself is dumb, in wonder lost,
"And factions strive who shall applaud him most."

PROVIDENCE, July 26.

A sloop from Philadelphia, Captain Wood, bound for Newport, foundered at sea last week. The vessel being old, and meeting with a heavy squall, her chain bolts were drawn, the mast went overboard, part of her deck was ripped up, and she was soon full of water. In this deplorable situation a sloop from Warren, bound for Maryland, happily hove in sight, took out the crew, with about 200 barrels of flour, and arrived at Newport on Sunday evening last.

WORCESTER, July 31.

We hear from Petersham, that about a fortnight since, there was considerable damage done by the most terrible thunder storm ever known in this country by the oldest man living. Several cattle we are told were killed, but do not learn that any persons lost their lives. It is said that the lightning struck in above an hundred places in and about that town, during the continuance of the storm, which, we hear, lasted upwards of two hours.

ALBANY, July 28.

Last Tuesday arrived in this city, on his way to Canada, the Hon. Major General Baron Steuben; he was received by the inhabitants in a manner suitable to a person of his distinguished character.

During the course of the last week, many of our soldiers who have been prisoners in Canada arrived in this city, having been released by the British commanding officer in that quarter.

NEW-YORK, August 9.

Last night arrived the ship Dragon, Captain Andrew Campbell, in eighteen days from the Havanna, by whom we learn, that a new and far more serious revolt than ever among those parts, has happened in South-America, particularly at Panama, and its vicinity. Before Captain Campbell sailed, three thousand Spanish troops departed for Carthagena, to proceed up to Panama, and they were to be followed by five thousand others, which could not accompany the first division for want of transports. The news of this defection was brought by an express frigate from la Vera Cruz, and the division sailed in thirty hours after her arrival; such dispatch was used, that the troops were embarked in the night. The voice of the natives is loud for an independence of the Spanish monarchy, and the most important consequences are expected from this event. Before the news reached Havanna, the Spanish troops were on their departure for Europe, and a number had sailed for Old Spain. Brigade Major Campbell had been enlarged, and sent with seven or eight British officers in a cartel for Jamaica, a fortnight before Capt. Campbell sailed.

The Fox frigate was at Havanna, on the passage to England; and the ship Carolina, Captain Angus, was sailed for London, in company with the Dragon, having on board a cargoe of sugar, rum and mahogany, from a condemned polacre from Jamaica for London. A Spanish 64 gun ship was lost in the bay of Mexico, said to be named the America. One thousand Spanish soldiers sailed for the Mississippi, the day before the first division proceeded for Carthagena.

A packet had arrived from Cadiz, with orders from the Court of Spain for the Spanish fleet not to sail for Europe: But Don Solano had already taken his departure with the whole fleet for Old Spain. Don Galvez was gone home in that fleet, on board which, it was said, sixty million of dollars were shipped. There was only one Spanish frigate (and no line of battle ship) left at Havanna.

PHILADELPHIA, August 13.

Captain Dalton, Superintendant of Indian affairs for the United States, arrived here last week from Canada, which he left about a month since, in company with 200 Americans, who are at length happily liberated from a cruel captivity with the savages. But he is sorry to inform us that there are a number of unfortunate fellow sufferers, who are still retained as prisoners by the Indians. The sufferings of Captain Dalton and his lady have been very great, both having been many years prisoners with the enemy, and forced to endure the most cruel treatment from their captors. For the satisfaction of their friends, Captain Dalton has given a list of the unhappy people who are confined chiefly among the six nations, viz. the Shawanese, Delawares, Munseys, Ouiactenaws, Putawawtawmaws, &c. &c.

The List is as follows:

James Grey, Jonathan Gold, James Stuart, George Fulks, Elizabeth Fulks, Mrs. Brown and three children, Jonathan Loug, Mary Long, Barbary M'Fall, John M'Fall, Lucy Linn, Hugh Stear. Thomas Williams, Katy Dundas, John Jones, Mary Jones, Mary M'Lee, Susy M'Lee, Ann M'Lee, Abraham Whiteker, Kennit Morris, Hannah Burk, William Morgan, James Rogers, Jonathan Trimble, William Hitchkok, Edmund Keer, Sarah Wilson, Nicholas Wilson, Nicholas Oatman, Margaret Sheerer, John Turney, Joseph Wilson, William Bangle, John Barton, Adam Shoemaker, John Dumford, Ambrose White, Jonathan Troy, Adam Brown, Francis Colaway, James Barley, Abraham Coone, Mary Emerick, Silvester Ash, George Ash, Henry Ash, Abraham Ash, Isaac Ash, Jesse Bland, Betsey Poke, Isaac Davis, Mary Denton, George Lech, Valentine Lawrens, Jonathan Hicks, Martin Coile, Barbary Coile, Crislin Coile, Barbary Coile, Margaret Baker, Betsey M'Cormick, James Cooper, Benjamin Brooks, Polly Francis, Betsey Plumer, Nancy Dalton, Mary Kennedy and two children, Peggy Pauland, Katy Sicks, Katy Etelmaw, David Etelmaw, Daniel Etelmaw. Elizabeth Fisher, Frederick Fisher, George Mawfit, Henry Calaway, Polly Whitman and her sister, Barbary Burger, Jonathan Calaway, Jones Hoy, Peggy Paulin, Charles M'Lane, Timothy Dormin and his wife, Jonathan Wilson, Jonathan Hanna, Rachel M'Kutchy, Darkey Miller, Nancy Martin, James M'Swine, Becky Lee, Sally Lee, Thomas Lee, Jonathan Delong, James Crawford, Betsey M'Caumin and son, James Cain, ------Miller,------Whitts,------Calaway,------Ward, Samuel Davis, Isaac Riddle and two brothers, Elizabeth Turner, Charles Mitchell, Polly Mitchell, Sally Whitenire, Andrew Armstrong and his sister, Lasley Malone, Robert Nealie, Elijah Mathews, Stephen Parish, James Davison, Henry Licters, Jacob Vingordor, Alexander Thomson, Jonathan Reddock, William Benjamin, Robert Cruders, Elijah Hunt, Adam Templeman, Jonathan Shull,------Pankburn, Samuel Proctor, Joseph Newman, Zophar Hawkins, Rudolph House and his brother, Nelly Smith, Katy Rinkle, Betsey Doherty, Polly M'Curdy, Mrs. Hersler and four children, Joseph Smith, David Price, Kijah Patterson.

Captain Dalton says, that on their way home, through Canada, they experienced the most polite treatment from the English officers, but were more than once abused by different parties of those wretches who had fled to Canada from the back parts of the United States, to avoid the vengeance of their countrymen, for the many horrid murders and burnings committed by them in conjuction with the English and Indians.

As Captain Dalton has been among the savages for many years, has now given his friends and the public an estimation of the different savage nations they had to encounter with, the number of warriors annexed to each nation that were employed by the British, and have stained their tomahawks with the blood of Americans, viz.

A small vessel from one of the eastern ports arrived at Quebec a little time before Captain Dalton left it; but the Captain being abused for keeping the American colours flying, and not suffered to enter, he left the port without breaking bulk, notwithstanding the articles he had to dispose of were much in demand at Quebec, and he was offered a great price for them.
